Plantation Built In 1820 Still Stands In County

Whether you are a "born and bred" native of Appomattox or a relative newcomer, each of us is justly proud of our beautiful National Historical Park and the old houses and buildings that are a part of it. However, many people are unaware of other places of interest in the county that are not so well known or so historically significant, but nevertheless have equal beauty and meaning in the development of our county.

One such place is the home of Mr. George H. Shreve and the late Ellie Shreve, of Route 1, Appomattox, located approximately 6 miles from Evergreen.

The home of Mr. Shreve was built in 1820 and was known as the "Captain William Hannah's Plantation". Although it originally contained over 1,000 acres, the land has been sold off until only 303 acres remain.

The frame constructed house, painted white with black shutters, is located on a knoll under majestic oak trees. English ivy grows in profusion around the base of the trees and native holly trees add their beauty to the lawn and nearby fields.

The high ceilings and spacious rooms are a perfect setting for the beautiful antiques which furnish the house. Among the unusual pieces is a table which belonged to the family of Patrick Henry. This piece, according to Mr. Shreve, will be left to the Patrick Henry Foundation. The wide polished boards of the entrance hall are the very same ones put there in 1820.

In the basement, or cellar as it was known in those days, is a small "room within a room", known as the wine cellar. Inside are the racks where the homemade wine was stored and aged.

William Hannah, the original owner, was Captain of the Minute Men during the Civil War. He was also a country doctor who was instrumental in the formation of Appomattox County in early 1845.

Captain Hannah had five sons, John Kirk, William, Jr., Presley Marshall, George and Walter Hannah.

John Kirk Hannah served in South Carolina under Johnson's Army. After the war ended, so it is told, he walked the entire way from South Carolina to his home in Virginia. He paid $200.00 for a cake made of corn meal and a glass of buttermilk during his journey.

Presley Marshall Hannah was a V.M.I. cadet who was stationed at Seven Pines near Richmond in Company C.

William, George, and Walter remained at home and took care of the farming during this time.

George Shreve, foster son of the third son of Captain Hannah, recalls these interesting facts among the many things he learned about the Hannah family during his childhood days.
